LHC G01

Course Description

This course introduces the social scientific study of gender, sexuality, and family in Japan from the postwar to the contemporary period from a comparative perspective. This course will critically question what gender, sex, and sexuality mean and how these concepts are shaping and shaped by Japanese society in the past and present. Specifically, this course will offer an entry into theories of gender studies, kinship, feminism, and sexuality, and also introduce tools to critically analyze cultural differences manifested in the issues of gender, family, and sexuality while at the same time learning more about Japanese society.
